Miscellaneous Reading

KISSED HIS MOTHER.

She sat on the porch in the sunshine.
As I went down the street—A woman whose hair was silver, But whose face was blossom-sweet, Making me think of a garden Where, in spite of the frost and snow Of bleak November weather, Late, fragrant lilies grow.

I heard a foot-step behind me,
And the sound of merry laugh.
And I knew the heart it came from Would be like a comforting staff In the time and the hour of trouble, Hopeful and brave and strong, One of the hearts to lean on When we think that things go wrong.

I turned at the click of the gate-latch,
And met his manly look,
A face like his gives me pleasure,
Like the pages of a pleasant book.
It told of a steadfast purpose, Of a brave and daring will—
A face with a promise in it That God grant the years fulfil.

He went on the pathway singing, I saw the woman's eyes Grow bright with a worldless welcome.
As sunshine warm the skies,
"Back again, sweet mother!"
He cried and bent to kiss The loving face that was lifted For what some mother's bliss.

That boy will do to depend on,
I hold that this is true—
From lads in love with their mothers, Our bravest heroes grow.
Earth's grandest hearts have been loving hearts Since time and earth began!
And the boy who kissed his mother Is every inch a man!

THE PALI OF KAUAI.

All of the abrupt cliffs and gulches and rough mountain country on the famous "Garden Island," would appear to be concentrated on the North-west side, in a range called the Pali, which forms the most precipitous coast-line on the Hawaiian Islands. It has a formidable frontage on the coast and extending inland, forms an impassable barrier, to a complete circuit of the island. The range is cut by several valleys which merge into the sea.
The valleys are enclosed by perpendicular walls closely approaching the sea in magnitude. A difficult trail from Waimea runs some distance over this high land, and a few adventurous spirits have attained points in a day and a half's hard toiling, where these same valleys are overlooked perpendicularly from eminences of four thousand feet. From these stupendous heights, when the fogs lie low, and with nothing but the murky atmosphere in sight—enclosed by the gigantic walls—the appearance of the valley suggests a bottomless abyss.

Entrance to these valleys is only gained from the sea by boats, the formidable nature of the coast cliffs forbidding anything like a road. Efforts have been made to cut trails for foot travelers near the coast bluffs, over the Pali from Mana to Haena Point, and by the help of scaling ladders and footways along the narrow ledges of the cliffs, people (principally natives) have been enabled to go some distance at the risk of their lives; but, we believe, the task of making a passage so as to effect a complete circuit of the island overland has been finally abandoned. Rev. Mr. Rowell, of Wai-mea, speaks of the time when, going to visit his native charges in one of these valleys, he found a ledge to scale that was so "scaley," and a ladder to climb, in prospect, so long, perpendicular and flimsy that he could not be prevailed upon to go any further. The natives accompanying him, the good preacher says, would run along the ledge and pass each other on it with astonishing celerity.
They would climb the ladder, swaying it for a test, and beckon him on; but for many years he resisted their blandishments; so his congregation had to come over from the valley to hear him preach.

"They are nearly all gone now," said the old gentleman, mournfully, "and the remote valleys are growing more silent every year."

So it is. The laughter of the kindly creatures is dying away, and the smiling aloha of the visitor from "over the cliff" grows less and less frequent.

SEE MECCA AND DIE.

[From "The Wild Tribes of the Soudan."]

A small band of Takroori pilgrims, returning from Mecca, had attached themselves to our caravan. The Tak-rooris came originally from Darfour.
They have now, however, settled in the neighbourhood of Gallabat, on the Abyssinian frontier; and the Egyptian Government has given them some land on a number of year's lease, where they cultivate "dhurra." The day before the Takroori band had been joined by two more men of their tribe, whom we had overtaken on the road. We had not noticed them, and knew nothing of their presence until Sulleman came to tell us about them, as one was ill. The doctor went to see what he could do for him, and found him lying on the ground smothered in sand, and evidently "in extremis." We administered brandy and did what we could, but he lasted only an hour. The man who was with him, and who said he was his brother, borrowed a spade from us, and buried him there and then. He had died literally of starvation and fatigue.

It appeared that these people had walked all the way from Gallabat to the coast, a distance of some hundreds of miles. On their return from Mecca, owing to Cholera at Jeddah, and in order to escape quarantine at Soua-kim, they had landed on the African coast, about a hundred miles south of that port. They were entirely without funds, and had lived on what they could beg from the Arabs, who are often kind to passing strangers.
Such deaths in the desert are doubtless of frequent occurrence, and are bound to be so while these long pilgrimages are undertaken, as they often are, by old men and women, almost totally unprovided with means, and frequently possessing nothing but the strong wish to see Mecca and die, which seems to bear them up and help them through apparently insurmountable difficulties.
The dead man's brother we looked after until our arrival in Cassala, where he left us, and continued his journey south to his home. This event brought to light a still more shocking occurrence that had taken place a few days previously.

Among the Takrooris who had joined us soon after leaving the coast were two women, one of whom was rather lame. As she could not well trudge along with the rest of the party, they simply left her behind to die in the desert; although her husband was with her, it appeared that he was perfectly satisfied to do so.
Unfortunately we knew nothing of it until so long after she had been left behind that it was impossible and quite useless to send after her. She could quite well have ridden on one of our camels; but such is the callous-ness to suffering and total disregard of life among these people that no one of the drivers had thought of asking her to do so.

A similar event took place when we were crossing the Great Nubian Desert from Korosko, four years before; then it was one of the camel-drivers that had been left behind to die. We knew nothing of it for several days after; and when we expressed our horror at what had happened, they considered they had behaved in a really generous manner by leaving him a small quantity of water and "dhurra" flour.

"I feel very much out of place," is what the man said when he lost a good position.
